More About Aidan

Aidan joined Haws-KM after serving as a clerk for the firm for two years, learning the intricacies of legal strategy and practice. Beyond litigation, she has a wide range of legal interests including in the areas of public health and counterterrorism. She enjoys taking her passion for law and using it to solve real-world issues. During her time in law school, she was active in several organizations, including serving as President of the University of Minnesota Federal Bar Association and the Minnesota Justice Foundation's "Street Law" program, in which she taught legal rights and responsibilities to incarcerated youth in Minnesota. She also gained valuable firsthand experience as a student attorney in the Robins Kaplan Civil Practice Clinic, representing low-income clients in civil court. Outside of the Office

Born and raised in St. Paul, Aidan grew up enjoying Minnesota's lakes, bike trails, sports, and all its seasons (yes, even winters). When she isn't in the office, Aidan enjoys reading non-fiction and studying new languages (ask her how many she speaks).
